FASHIONS ARE ALL THE RAGE

What One Group of Women Looked Like-The New Bonnet-Toilets for Lenten Wear.

Certainly the New York woman grows more independent daily. The fact never before impressed me so deeply as it did yesterday when I stood in the midst of a large number of my sex, all crowded into the pariors of a clab that had opened its doors to them that after noon. They were well-dressed women for the most part—rarely had I seen so many pretty gowns together—and yet every woman had asserted her inde-

There was morely a suspicion of the hoop skirt, and there was but little em-One saw a commingting of all the little confusing and withal very pleasfng. Oreat puffed sleeves frowned down on hopelessly drooping ones; great flares of skirts half encircled shrinking, elinging ones; big hats lovingly drooped over "loves" of tiny bonnets, and thick feather boas greeted fluttering ribbons in tender fashion. It was a very pretty cluster of color that stood in one crowded corner, and I sat myself down in a great chair, brought forth my implements, and proceeded to note the dresses in the group, while a small coedings with a timid, yet admiring sir, that group, each a very pale, soft gray.

One was made with gray bengaltan, one had a very pretty silk V at the back and in the front, outlined with a rich pearl trimming and fringe. The third had a black relvet ruftle on the shrt, a sleeves; a bengaline yoke, over which were crambars of fine jet, joining collar

Next to the first pearl gray maidea a werman stood clad in black relyet, of white at the neck. Then a costume of old rose benguline had a great deal and high belt.

There were exactly three grays in

it. It must represent the cuimination of a purpose, the realization of a dream, or be the personification of a fancy, else it has no attraction for the average mun, or man, either, for that matter, Thus we see so much of the belt, the belies, the short jacket, the full fold they all belp to produce the desired

Last in this group of fair women came the girl with the plaid allk-such an immense plaid with such vivid coloring that it almost took one's breath away. It was made very prettily, though, particularly at the back, where three plants, turning toward the middle at each side, were drawn together below the waist under a loose guid beit. Refore we leave the absorbing topic of dress to take up the still more absorbing one of bonnet, let me remind you that all the dresses you order now you that all the dresses you order now must be of simple, unpretentious character, because, for one reason, it is Lent, and, for another, it is not well to trust capricious Dame Fashion to any extent just at this juncture. She is ready at present for almost anything, and we do not want to provoke her to sudden and disastrous changes. Therefore, for a neat house gown, try this simple one of the Louis Phillipe, made from a combination sulting, plain mafrom a combination suiting, plain ma-terial and border, skirt slightly full, bordered with plain bands above the embroidered border; the waist is simply guthered tightly into a close-fitting belt of material to match the skirt's band. A yoke of embroidery is put in, and where it joins the bodice proper two folds of the same material as the belt are laid; they continue around the shoulder, even to the back of the dress, where they finish in a point. At the front the plaits are drawn into a point by a big buckle.

But I know you are more interested in the bonnets. All women are. It takes three times as long to decide upon the make-up of a tiny article but a few inches in diameter as it does to decide upon a garment ever so many yards in width. These three dainty bits that I must tell you of are smaller than usual, which fact only makes them more proclous in our sight. One has a brocade crown and is trimmed in front with folds and knots of black lace, from which spring small, straight loops of pale green ribbon. That's all there is

The well-meaning people, not being over-stocked with chairs, had given the summissioner their best substitute for a cushion. Faraday's agality in vacating this seat of honor may be imagined.—Youth's Companion.

WOMEN BORROWERS.

The Trouble Is They Never Return Anything You Lend Them.

"What! You remember to return my pencil? Marvelous! Surely, you ought to be set on a pedestal as a model for the rest of your sex."

Thus spoke a man of whom a little blonde creature had borrowed a Faber No. 2, says the Philadelphia Times. "Well," she laughed, "I don't know whether I would have been any more thoughtful than the rest of womankind if I had any place to put it."

"Ah! that accounts for it, then, for I thought there must be some good rea-son for that unusual honesty," went on that borrid man.

"What a woman borrows, whether it is money or mucliage, I never expect to see the loaned commodities again. When she says: 'May I borrow so-and-When she says: 'May I borrow so andso?' it is only a polite way of asking for it, and the man who thinks he will ever get it back knows nothing of feminine human nature. Umbrellas are common property for all mankind, bfit masculine rapacity stops right there. Not so with the members of the fair sex.

"They look on everything as borrowable, which is synonymous for possessable. They don't think it wrong to appropriate others' property so long as they have prefaced its transference by the polite: 'May I borrow?' Books go for a day and remain for a lifetime.
Money is never once mentioned after

Money is never once mentioned after the primary transaction, and the small things of life, such as scissors, pens and pencils, are gobbled up with an unconscious paivete that staggers the lender. If a return is even hinted at one would suppose mortal offense has been given, and the only way to keep in your pos-session anything you really value is to swear you haven't such a thing when the dulcet: 'May I borrow, just for a short time please?' falls on your ear."

THE CHISHOLM TRAIL Bleaching Skulls Mark the Most Famous of Old Cattle Roads

The most famous of the old cattle roads was, according to Scribner's Mag-azine, the "Chisholm Trail." It was named after John Chisholm, an eccentric frontier stockman, who was the first to drive over it. Chisholm lived at Paris, Tex., was a bachelor, and had many thousand head of cattle on the ranges in the southern part of the state. From two hundred to four hundred yards wide, beaten into bare earth, it reached over hill and through valley for over six hundred miles (including its southern extension), a chocolate band amid the green prairies, uniting the north and the south. As the marching hoofs were it down and the wind blow and the waters washed the earth away it became lower than the surrounding country and was flanked by little banks of sand drifted there by the wind. Bleaching skulls and skeletons of weary brutes who had perished on the journey gleamed along its borders, and here and there was a low mound showing where some cowboy had lit-erally "died with his boots on." Occasionally a dilapidated wagon frame told of the breakdown, and spotting the emerald reaches on either side were the barren circle-like "bedding grounds," each a record that a great herd had deal of careful manipulation to bring there spent a night. about the desired effect. The style is The weight of an empire passed over the trail, leaving its mark for decades to come. The traveler of to-day sees the wide, trough-like course, with ridges being washed down by the rains and with fences and furms of the settlers and the more civilized red men intercepting its track, and forgets the wild and arduous life of which it was the exponent. It was a life now outgrown and which will never again be possible.

THE MIDDLE CAR IS SAFEST.

How a Commercial Traveler Secures a Missimum of Risk. A commer tial traveler tells the Washington Star that he is very particular as to the car be selects. "I travel thousands of miles a year," he says, "and have made it a rule to observe in the accounts of railroad accidents which cars of the trains are most often demolished. The result of my experience -for I have been in a dozen smash-ups -and observation is that the middle cars are the safest. I never under any circumstances ride in the rear car. I svoid the car next to the baggage car. though this is selected by many as the safest. The greatest danger at present in railroad traveling is telescoping. When a man has been in a wreck and afterward seen the engine of the colliding train half way inside of the rear car, or rather what's left of it, it impresses him most forcibly. The baggage car is usually beavily loaded, and in the collision its weight, together with the ponderous engine, generally smashes the next car to aplinters, while the central cars are comparatively uninjured. When the train is deralled the buggage car and next couch, as a rule, go over. The roadbeds of our great transcontinental lines are so solid, each section is so carefully examined, the rolling stock is so much improved that a broken rail, broken wheel or sale and like mishaps are re-

When you see in the paper a nice littie story about blushing brides, don't think the blushes are always caused by the emotions of the occasion. I thought so once, but I discovered a secret the ther evening at a wedding that is really ton good to keep. The wedding party was in the ventipair, says the Boston News. Her maid of lumper pothers this, and playfully, as thought, pinched the fair one's check. But what seemed a carelon setten was evidently prancipaled for an account and the bride's checks show a tinge of pink than the maid of house proceeded to manipulate for own fair features, and her action was imitated by all the bridenmaids. Then the organist played and the party proceeded to the altar.

POET CARPET-CLEANER. The Almost Disserves Boosis of time of Touriscon's Viette.

The post Tennyson had his little mis haps, just as less gifted mortals do One afternoon, says the Youth's Companton, he called on some fracida, learned that they were not at home, and decided to leave a note. The house-maid took him to the drawing-room, maid took him to the drawing-room, and gave him pen, ink and paper.

When signing his name to his polite little missive. Tennyson, by a jerk of the cibow, overturned the ink bottle; and great was his dismay at seeing a large pool of ink spreading rapidly over his friend's new white Persian carpet of matchless beauty. Horror-struck, he rang the bell. Up ran the servant. "Do please heip mel" cried the poet.

It happened that the militman had just left a can of frothing milk at the door, and the intelligent housemaid remembered in the nick of time that new milk, if shrown over wet ink, would membered in the nick of time that new milk, if shrown over wet ink, would remore all traces of the despoiling fluid. Accordingly she overturned the jug upon the large black pool, and with house flanne; and cloths set about rubbing and scrubbing at the stain.

Down went Tennyson on his hands and knees, rubbing and scrubbing with his little helpmeet. His agony of mind lest his old friend should knock at the door and suddenly appear on the scene of disaster he often described in later days, declaring that it "reached the infinite." But with mech a good will did this strange couple work together that every trace of ink was removed.

"Here is a five-shilling piece, my good girl," cried the poet, "and God bless you!"

With that he seized his hat and made for the door. Some weeks later an in-vitation to dine with his old friends reached Tennyson. He went; and the carpet was in no way alluded to on aither side.

The Fountain Head of Strength.

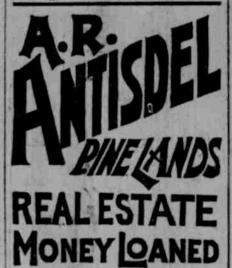

The Fountain Head of Strength.

When we recollect that the stomach is the grand laboratory in which food is transformed into the secretions which furnish vigor to the system after entering and earliching the blood; that it is, in short, the fountain head of strength, it is essential to keep this important supplying machine in order and to restore it to activity when it becomes inactive. This Hostetter's Stomach Bitters does most effectually, seasonably, regulating and reinforcing digestion, promoting due action of the liver and howels. Strength and quietude of the nerves depend in great measure upon thorough direction. There is no nervine tonic more highly estemated by the medical frateraity than the litters. Physicians also strongly commend it for child and fever, rhounatism, kidney and bladder trouble, sick headache and want of appetite and sleep. Take a wine glassful three times a day.

For neuralgia, rheumatism, head and so difficult a one to describe that the sketch of it will give you a better idea than a description. I can tell you that the loosely braided hair is colled once about the head, that a portion of it stands in a loop at the top of the coil and another portion in a smaller loop at the bottom, that innumerable little small curis droop from the cutfure, and that some ribbon loops and loovs are also wound in with it. But I shall not attempt to tell you just how to hold your hand first, how to take the second position, how to gather and dispose of the strands, and all the rest, for I am certain you would be none the wiser when all was said.
